GUIDE TO MARINE FACILITIES

PORT OF OAKLAND

CROSSROADS OF THE WEST

The Port of Oakland is located on the eastern (or mainland) side of San Francisco Bay, one of the world's most beautiful natural harbors. The Port is the largest container port on the Pacific Coast of the United States, second largest in the United States, and ranks among the largest container ports in the world in terms of container tonnage, container storage space, container berths and container cranes. Located along its 19 miles of waterfront are 400 acres of container terminal facilities, including 28 berths, of which 17 serve container, combination container / break-bulk and roll-on / roll-off ships, 16 container cranes, and an additional 40 acres of general cargo and special commodities storage area. All of the marine terminal facilities are port owned, although they are operated by private steamship or terminal companies under lease or tariff agreements. The Port is served directly by three trans-continental railroad companies, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, Southern Pacific and Western Pacific, and two of those lines have their major Northern California marshalling and container yards within two miles of all Oakland docks. Truck access to major freeway systems, including Interstate 80 and 580, U.S. 50 and State 17, is fast and efficient. The air cargo service at Oakland International Airport is just minutes away.

CROSSROADS OF THE WEST

The Port of Oakland is located on the eastern (or mainland) side of San Francisco Bay, one of the world's most beautiful natural harbors. The Port is the largest container port on the Pacific Coast of the United States, second largest in the United States, and ranks among the largest container ports in the world in terms of container tonnage, container storage space, container berths and container cranes. Located along its 19 miles of waterfront are 400 acres of container terminal facilities, including 28 berths, of which 17 serve container, combination container / break-bulk and roll-on / roll-off ships, 16 container cranes, and an additional 40 acres of general cargo and special commodities storage area. All of the marine terminal facilities are port owned, although they are operated by private steamship or terminal companies under lease or tariff agreements. The Port is served directly by three trans-continental railroad companies, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, Southern Pacific and Western Pacific, and two of those lines have their major Northern California marshalling and container yards within two miles of all Oakland docks. Truck access to major freeway systems, including Interstate 80 and 580, U.S. 50 and State 17, is fast and efficient. The air cargo service at Oakland International Airport is just minutes away.
